A full-text database of the corpus of Latin literature produced in Celtic-speaking Europe from the period 400-1200 A.D.

- › More than 450 texts available
- › Live links to the Database of Latin Dictionaries
- › Cross-searchable with other full-text databases

BREPOLiS

Royal Irish Academy

More than four hundred and fifty Latin works by over a hundred known and unknown authors, spanning the fields of theology, liturgy, computistics, grammar, hagiography, poetry and historiography, and including legal texts, charters, inscriptions, etc.

In the early Middle Ages, literate individuals in and from the Celtic periphery of Europe (Ireland, Wales, Brittany, Cornwall, Scotland and the Isle of Man) wrote many and varied Latin works constituting what can arguably be seen as a distinctive literature, whose unusual vocabulary, grammar and phrasing (to say nothing of subject-matter) made it into what has been called “one of the most curious and interesting phenomena of medieval philology”. In an attempt to codify this usage, the Royal Irish Academy has been working actively since the late 1970s towards producing a definitive Dictionary of Medieval Latin from Celtic Sources (DMLCS) — part of a Europe-wide movement to publish lexicons of the medieval Latin of specific national areas.

From the outset DMLCS has been computer-based, having as a second objective the establishment of a permanent electronic database containing the whole corpus of Celtic-Latin literature from the period 400-1200 A.D. (about 1300 separate texts, varying from fragmentary inscriptions to learned treatises hundreds of pages long). This full-text database, historically held in the Queen’s University, Belfast, is richly marked up — for non-Latin words, categories of quotation, etc. — so as to be of maximum use to the lexicographer. But it was always envisaged that, as its construction proceeded, the archive would come to be of value to scholars in other disciplines as well — to the editor of texts, the syntactician, the researcher into geographical or chronological distribution of usages, the historian interested in the transmission of ideas or texts, and to many others. The question was how to make it available to them.

That question is being answered with Brepols’ publication, from the DMLCS database, of a series of three cumulative editions of a full-text Archive of Celtic-Latin Literature. Originally modelled upon Brepols’ existing Library of Latin Texts (Cetedoc Library of Christian Latin Texts), this was designed to constitute with that corpus the beginnings of a pan-European electronic library of patristic and medieval Latin material. The initiative is proceeding as follows:

- The first, preliminary edition, was originally released on CD-ROM in 1994 and, in a revised form, on line in 2007. This extensive collection consisted of over four hundred selected texts, representative of the authors, nationalities, periods and genres in the Celtic-Latin domain. As befitted a database designed to encapsulate what was most distinctive in Celtic-Latin literature, the texts in ACLL-1 were largely chosen for their embodiment of that difference.
- As it is increasingly becoming apparent that Celtic authors of Latin in the period from the fifth century to the thirteenth also contributed to mainstream European Latin culture in ways for which they have not hitherto been accorded sufficient credit, a principal intention of the developed and expanded second edition is to provide searchable access to Celtic-Latin material that went on to make its mark across western Europe. The additional works involved are being placed online in cumulative annual releases (during the period 2008-2010), each containing all of the material captured so far (including what was in ACLL-1) plus, on each occasion, up to a further half-million words of continuous text. The first such release has now been published on line.
- The initiative is planned to culminate in ACLL-3, a third, definitive edition, once the database has reached the maximum feasible size — that is, when all accessible Celtic-Latin texts have been captured and processed to standard.

Contents

The second, developed electronic edition of ACLL contains the following works, here listed according to the sequence, numbering system and categories used for the search-structure of the Archive, as adapted from that used by M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe in their Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400-1200 (L&S).

ONLINE

Key Features

- Contains more than 450 texts
- The database is updated yearly with new material
- The interface is the same as Brepols full-text databases (Library of Latin Texts, Monumenta Germaniae Historica and Aristoteles Latinus Database)
- By using the Cross Database Searchtool, ACLL can be searched online together with the Library of Latin Texts, the Monumenta Germaniae Historica and the Aristoteles Latinus Database
- Interface in English, French, German and Italian
- Possibility to find a text based on a Lapidge & Sharpe reference (L&S)
- The powerful search-software enables the users to undertake enhanced search possibilities:
 - by using wildcards and Booleans operators, the user can construct complex search-queries
 - filters are used when, instead of searching through the entire data set, one wishes to restrict the search to a particular Author or group of Authors, a particular Work, a particular Period or Century.

'live links'

... a user can select a word found in a text of ACLL and automatically find entries on the word in the constituent dictionaries of the Database of Latin Dictionaries.

The screenshot displays the ACLL (Archive of Celtic Latin Literature) search results page. The top navigation bar includes 'BREPOLIS', 'All Products', language options (EN, FR, DE, IT), and links for 'Home', 'Settings', 'Help', and 'Exit'. The main header reads 'accl Archive of Celtic Latin Literature'. Below this, there are tabs for 'Search Screen', 'Table of Contents', and 'Distribution of Word-forms', along with a 'Last Update: 2009-03-07' timestamp. The search results are displayed in a table with columns for 'Query', 'Position on', and 'Search'. The results list various texts, including 'Historia regum Britanniae' by Galfridus Monemutensis and 'Itinerarium Cambriae' by Giraldus Cambrensis. Each result includes a snippet of text and a link to the full text. The left sidebar contains search filters and options to export results as PDF or mail to a specific address.
